

CHIEF Aritsugawa, of Japan, arrived this afternoon and are stopping at Schweimler's Garden Hotel.

From what I hear respecting the fact that this close relative and trusted adviser of the Emperor of Japan has moved to Hamburg may be connected with a political event of great importance and have direct relation with the prospects of peace, which are possibly nearer than most people are led to believe. This view is strongly substantiated by the fact that the Prince is accompanied by M. Inouye, Japanese minister at Berlin, the secretary of legation and military and naval attaches, and also the renowned Marquis Ito.

Another interesting fact is that the Japanese Prince is in receipt of a steady flow of dispatches dated Washington.

Prince Aritsugawa has been encouraged in the highest quarters to remain in this convenient position in Europe, while efforts are being made in Berlin, Washington, Paris and London to build a bridge of peace.

Russian General Says Peace is Impossible Unless Japan is Reasonable.

(By Associated Press.)

GUNSHU PASS, MANCHURIA, June 8.—General Batajoff, commander of the third Manchurian army, addressing the troops yesterday on the occasion of the Empress's birthday, told them he hoped soon to be able to telegraph the news of a Russian victory to Her Majesty. Later, in conversation with the correspondent of the Associated Press, the general declared that the defeat of the fleet was a sad and hard blow, but it would not affect the morale of the troops, who, with the doggedness of the Russian soldier, were prepared to fight on as long as the Emperor gave the word.

"If the sea is lost," he added, "Russia can still be victorious on land. Peace, unless Japan is reasonable, is impossible."

WILLARD WINS IN THE HILL CITY

Willard began by expressing his appreciation of the large audience and for the personal tribute paid him by Mr. Harrison. He said he had no claim for the high position he was seeking, and he did not want to be rewarded for doing his duty. "If I have loyally served my party, I have only done my duty, and this does not win me a place in the history of the party. It is for me to be loyal to the party. If in victory or defeat, wherever the party needs me, then and there will I be found. Nor shall I submit my personal ambition to you," he said, "in order to secure your votes. My ambition is one of fitness. Not my estimate of my fitness, but your estimate of me. I do not boast of my record, nor am I ashamed of it, and am willing to stand by it. I stand in a single word, it is progress. This is a practical duty, and if Virginia is to regain her prestige, then she must become a potent factor in commercial and industrial affairs of the country."

All Surplus for Schools.

Referring to the schools, he favored the use of all surplus money for them, and not by an increase of taxation. He favored starting with the primary schools and building from them up.

On the single text-book question, he favored this unqualifiedly, as soon as the present contract expired. He said he had better schools, he argued the terms should be longer, with better teachers, and to secure better teachers, he favored more pay for them. He said:

"I have not added or subtracted from my letter of announcement. I was the first to advocate the single book list, and I feel flattered that my competitors have approved my plans and are now advocating the same thing daily."

On the good roads question, he said he favored good roads, just like all of his hearers, but thought the only way the State would get them would be to go down in the pockets of the people and pay for them.

Convict Question.

Taking up the convict labor question, he declared he was unqualifiedly in favor of working the convicts on the roads of the State, and at the same time he expressed in no uncertain terms his opposition to the contract with the Davis Shoe Company. He declared this to be wrong, both in policy and principle. Every time a convict lifts his hand on this contract, he comes in competition with honest labor. Why should Virginia be a party to supply a shoe contract labor at forty-two cents a day, while other firms have to pay from $1.50 to $2.50 for the same labor? He advocated working persons convicted of petty crimes and sentenced to the jails on the public roads.

Referring briefly to the Mann bill, he said: "I do not believe this is an issue in this campaign. This is a question for the general assembly. The law has been productive of great good, but the question of amending or repealing it is not one for the executive. When my views on this law were asked for, I expressed them frankly and honestly, and I stand by them. I am not a dictator. Governor, I shall enforce every law and will make no exception of the Mann law."

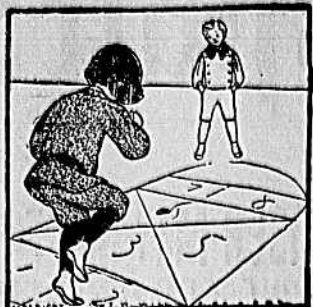

He declared the State needs to encourage capital to come to the State, and, next to this, to encourage the producer to come with us.

In closing he said: "I have tried to submit to you my views. If you approve them and you believe I am best fitted of those who are seeking the office, then, and only then, I ask you to support me."

King Much Affected.

(By Associated Press.)

CHRISTIANIA, June 8.—The Storting this afternoon empowered the president of the Storting to forward to King Oscar the address adopted yesterday, with a covering memorandum.

Two Norwegian gentlemen, who were appointed to attend Prince Gustavus Adolphus, eldest son of the Crown Prince, at his marriage to Princess Margaret of Connaught, will, pending instructions, remain here instead of accompanying the Prince to London.

The prayer book of the Norwegian Church has been modified in accordance with the change in the political situation. The prayers for the royal family being omitted. The ecclesiastical authorities have issued a notice calling on the clergy at the first celebration of divine service after the deposition of the King to offer an appropriate prayer for the fatherland. It is announced that Mr. Gude, minister at Copenhagen, who is a Norwegian, has decided to resign, and it is assumed that Mr. Grip, minister at Washington; Mr. Von Dittmar, minister at Rome, and Baron Von Wedel-Jarlsberg, minister at Madrid, who also are Norwegians, will tender their resignations.

Mr. Paulsen, Premier Michelsen's secretary, has returned from Stockholm, where he went to hand the King's letter announcing the decision of the Norwegian government. He says that the King opened the letter and read the first few lines. He then appeared to be deeply moved, and asked his secretary to read it aloud. At the conclusion of the reading, His Majesty vented his feelings in unstrained terms. He said that the Norwegian gentlemen present, assuring them of his increasing affection for Norway and the Norwegian people.

Ovation for Crown Prince.

(By Associated Press.)

MALMO, SWEDEN, June 8.—Crown Prince Gustavus received a tremendous ovation on his arrival here from a crowd of 10,000 persons.

History of Trouble.

That the union between Sweden and Norway, which was effected in 1814, was becoming strained of late years and in danger of absolute dissolution had been apparent to close students of the situation for some time. The union, which had been developing until it took definite form in the light of the Norwegian constitutional law, the acceptance of which, which was prophesied to mean much to the political situation.

The demand of Norway for a separate consular service, simple as it really was, had become a serious of measures which tended to eventually bring about the independence of Norway.

In the month of February King Oscar for a time left the throne and put the reins of government in the hands of the Crown Prince. On May 17, he returned from his vacation and resumed control of affairs. The first business of importance which came to him was the bill creating separate consular services for the two countries over which he ruled. When the Norwegian Council of Ministers at Stockholm presented the measure to him, the King declined to sign it, and thus brought on the present crisis.

Resignation of Ministers.

It was said, before the veto and been made, that upon King Oscar's refusal to sign the consular bill, the ministers would immediately hand in their resignations; and, refusing to withdraw them, would, on the practical certainty that there would be no one to form a new ministry, leave the country without a responsible government. Things having come to such a pass, the Storting decided of its own initiative and prerogative appoint a ministry over the head of the King. This would mean that the break would have actually been made and that the dual kingdom would have been split at last.

Although the actual course of events did not pan out exactly as the prophets had declared, the action of the Storting today is, perhaps, as radical as any that could have been foreseen. It is a calm recognition of the present status of affairs and a cool placing of the onus of the crisis on the shoulders of the King.

The ministers, in fact, did resign, as was expected, and, as was also expected, did not withdraw their resignations when their sovereign made it plain that a new ministry could not be brought together for some time. The Council stubbornly declined to countermand a proposal of the proceedings, thus making the veto of the King, according to the Constitution, null and void.

Resort to Force Not Expected.

It is generally believed that Sweden will not resort to force to keep her consort bound to her. Her attitude, as voiced by Doctor Hedin, is that the separation would be the lesser by the time past and that, on the whole, Sweden would be foolish to fire a single gun for the maintenance of the union.

The Swedish champion has been carrying on a journalistic duel with Doctor Nansen, of Norway, for some time past in the London Times, and takes occasion now and then to snap his fingers at the Norwegian view of the momentous dissolution of a long union. He said: "If Norway chooses of her own free will to rupture the union, Sweden cannot be held responsible for the dangers to which she thereby exposes herself, and if those dangers prove also an indirect menace to Sweden, then we must, for the future and in obedience to the primary law of self-preservation, study exclusively our own protection, no matter how painful it might be to us to see Norway in the grasp of the despotism of the future. We want our blood and our Free Trade and Protection.

One of the fundamental differences between the two countries is that while Norway, on account of her great shipping, is for free trade, Sweden, however, paid no attention to the question, and the friction between the two countries was bound to prove all but fatal.

Yet, from the very beginning, there was never that cordiality of sympathy and unity of purpose which is necessary to the welding of two or more distinct governments into one harmonious whole. Sweden first incorporated her neighbor under her rule when Denmark ceded Norway to the King of Sweden, on January 18, 1814. The Norwegians, however, paid no attention to the question, and the friction between the two countries was bound to prove all but fatal.

Each kingdom had its own Parliament, while the affairs of the two kingdoms were acted upon by a Council of State.

The House of Bernadotte.

The House of Bernadotte, the present Swedish royal family, was founded by Jean Baptiste Jules Bernadotte, Prince of Ponte Corvo, one of the marshals of Napoleon. He was elected by the Swedish Diet in 1818 as the heir and successor of Charles XIII., King of Sweden, last sovereign of the House of Holstein.

He succeeded to the throne in 1818 under the name of Charles XIV. He died in 1844, and was succeeded by his son, Oscar I., who reigned until his death, in 1859, when his son, Charles XV., came to the throne. The present King is a brother of Charles XV., and succeeded him in 1872. King Oscar was 76 years old.

King Oscar has four sons, any one of whom might be chosen to mount the Norwegian throne except the eldest, who is the present heir apparent to the throne of Sweden. He is the Crown Prince Gustavus Adolphus, who was born in 1858. The King's other sons are Oscar, born in 1859; Charles, born in 1861, and Eugene, born in 1865. The Crown Prince has three sons, Gustavus Adolphus, who is now 22 years old; William, who is 21, and Eric, who is 18. William is the prince who has been particularly mentioned for the Norwegian throne.

(Special to The Times-Dispatch.)

ASHLAND, VA., June 8.—The final exercises of the commencement at Randolph-Macon closed to-night with the class exercises in the chapel. The following were the participants: Address by president, E. J. Bryer; roll-call, B. G. Betty; salutatory, R. N. Swinby; oration, J. E. B. Mapp; history, R. P. Gravelly; prophecy, C. H. Schenck; poem, B. G. Betty; recommendations, B. A. Steger; will and testament, W. L. Gills; valedictory, F. B. Cooper.

All of these speeches were unusually apt, bright and catchy. They were brief and to the point and gave liveliness, ease and pith to the exercises.

DR. TIGERT'S ADDRESS.

A large crowd was in attendance this morning, when Dr. Tigert spoke in the college chapel. Dr. Tigert began his address by saying that wherever he had visited, in educational circles, he had observed that Randolph-Macon College holds a foremost place and exerts a potent influence. He declared Randolph-Macon to be the mother of Methodist institutions of learning. Here President Blackwell interrupted him to say that Vanderbilt University was the natural grandchild of Randolph-Macon. Dr. Tigert remarked that Randolph-Macon holds not only a history of time, but that she stands in the front rank of small colleges, an example "worthy of all imitation."

He discusses the difference between the college and the university. He declared the aim of the college to be the impartation of knowledge; the aim of the university to be the research and investigation and the work of extending human knowledge. Dr. Tigert's address was the crowning feature of the exercises.

IMMEDIATELY FOLLOWING.

Immediately following Dr. Tigert's address came the awarding of medals and prizes. The prizes given by the Randolph-Macon Monthly for the best prose contribution was awarded to Mr. J. P. Simmons. DON'T LET A COMMERCIAL PIANO ENTER YOUR HOME

Now that we have warned piano buyers so persistently about the peril of the "just-as-good piano," we are prepared to hear that they no longer meet with it. We suspect they're encountering the "better than Moses" kind now.

That sounds "taking," but we hope you won't be taken by it. If you want a piano at all you want a good one. Don't pay out a lot of good money for a pretty case and a fancy name.

There are any number of commercial bargain pianos going the rounds that haven't been with us long enough to have a name of their own, yet some of them boast several. Ask your friends of the music world about any of our pianos—STEINWAY, WEBER, HARDMAN, KIMBALL, WHELOCK, STAND-ARD and HAINES.

Ask your friends who have had them in their homes. We have a long list of parties we have sold pianos, among them some you know probably. This list is at your service. The purchase of a piano involves the spending of more money than for the ordinary household article. We want you to feel that in dealing with us you are certainly doing "the best you can."

Alfonso Passed Another Busy Day Sightseeing in British Capital.

(By Associated Press.)

LONDON, June 8.—King Alfonso, of Spain, who displayed the tireless energy of youth, has passed another busy day of sightseeing, crowned with a gala performance of opera.

In his honor, Covent Garden was transformed into a bower of red and yellow roses, the stage being thus completely framed in the Spanish colors. The whole auditorium was looped and festooned with roses, orchids, spring flowers and brilliant lights.

When the royal party arrived at 9 o'clock, King Alfonso leading Queen Alexandra and King Edward leading Princess Louise of Wales, the gentlemen being garbed in court attire or uniform and the ladies mostly in white gowns with dazzling jewels. All stood while the Spanish and English anthems were played. Then came selections from "Romeo and Juliet," "La Traviata," "The Barber of Seville," "The Marriage of Figaro," "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," "The Huguenots," sung by Mrs. Melba, Mr. Caruso, the Americans, Miss Elizabeth Parkinson and Mr. Whitehall and other leading artists.

College was opened at its first site, near Boydton, down in the Randolph and Macon country, within less than a year of the time John Randolph died. It received its first students in October, 1832, and on the 27th of the following May Randolph's brilliant life came to a close.

As to Macon.

After his brilliant conception of the character of Randolph, Mr. Bryan then said of Macon:

"Of Macon it is enough at this time to say that Randolph said of him in his will: 'He was the best, the purest, the wisest man I ever knew; and the history of his life is a record of him that the Legislature of his State elected him to the Senate of the United States, not only without his seeking it, but without his own knowledge—certainly in our days an unheard of sort of man.'"

President, I conclude as I began with the conviction that Randolph-Macon College has a good name, one which lifts up in itself a perennially high and noble standard for the conduct of our men. It gives me great pleasure, Mr. President, to present to the college, in the name of the donor, Joseph Bryan, Esq., of Roanoke, this portrait of John Randolph, of Roanoke, the great man who, by his character and life of his cherished and faithful friend, Nathaniel Macon, of Warren county, North Carolina.

Bishop Granbery's Response.

Bishop John C. Granbery accepted the gift in behalf of the college in the following words:

"As a member of the board of trustees, I am happy to accept this fine portrait of that great Virginian, John Randolph, of Roanoke, whose memory we honor and cherish in the name of this college—Randolph-Macon College. The portrait, which is a fine work of art, is a fitting memorial to the great man who, by his character and life of his cherished and faithful friend, Nathaniel Macon, of Warren county, North Carolina.
